

Artemus Ward, one of whose peculiarities as a lecturer is that he touches upon almost every conceivable subject except the subject of his lecture, is delivering a lecture on "Ghosts," which he concludes with a capital hit at the disbelievers North and South. "The last subject of which I thought," says Artemus, "was the war. When I was an apprentice to the printing business, in New Hampshire, having had a controversy with my employer, I ran away. I had no money, and could not beg, so I called at a farm-house and asked if they had any clocks to mend. They said yes, and wished I would fix it. I took the clock to pieces, ate my dinner, and then looked at the table, where lay the countless wheels. I knew that I never could put that clock together again. So I told the folks I was dizzy, and would go out and get some fresh air, and I did across the meadows like the bright-eyed gazelle, or anything else that goes quick. The politicians who went to work to take the Union clock to pieces to eat their dinner, never meant to put it together again. They have stolen their dinner, but they will not restore the clock. I haven't told you much about the ghosts, and it is late now that there is not time. But I shall speak in San Francisco in about four weeks from this time, and all who hold tickets to this lecture will be admitted free." By the way, we suppose the engagement mentioned in this last sentence is the one upon the tapis when Artemus, being interrogated by telegraph from San Francisco as to what he would take, replied by the return lightning: "Brandy and water!" But to return.

The hit of the inimitable "showman" is a palpable one. The radical politicians North and South, as the Buffalo Courier says, had a jubilee time together, a year or two ago, taking the Union clock to pieces. They could not get their infernal work quickly enough. "Without a little blood-letting," said Zack Chandler, of Michigan, "this Union will not, in my estimation, be worth a curse." "Let the Union slide," said others of the black-hearted gang. And those who forswore the consequences of their perfidious actions were "weak" womanly Union-savers, of whom Massachusetts Wilson said scoldingly: "This sitting up with the Union does not pay expenses." And so, piece by piece, until by and by, they took the Union clock to pieces. The Southern rebels who took part in the operation have made nothing by it, but the Northern disunionists, including office-holders of all grades, civil and military, contractor, &c., &c., are now "dining" gluttonously at the nation's expense. And the country has the broken, disjointed "clock" upon its hands, which the radical quacks in clock-mending never meant, and never mean to put together again. And, strange as it may seem, the only "loyal" and "unconditional Union" men now in the country are the bogus clock-menders.

WHY THE ROMANS WENT TO BED EARLY.—History tells us that ancient Rome even in times of festival, was as quiet as the grave after the closing of night—a fact that De Quincey thus accounts for:

They went to bed early simply because their mother earth could not afford them candles. She, good old lady, or young lady (for geologists know not whether she is in that state of her progress which corresponds to gray hairs, or to infancy; or a certain age), she, good lady, would certainly have shuddered to hear any of her nations inquiring for candles. "Candles indeed!" she would say, who ever heard of such a thing? and with so much excellent daylight running to waste as I have provided gratis? What will the wretches want next? The Romans therefore who saw no joke in sitting around a table in the dark, went off to bed as the darkness began. Everybody did so. Old Numa Pompilius himself was obliged to trundle off in the dark. Targuinius may have been a superb fellow—but I doubt whether he ever saw a shining rush-light. And though it may be thought that plots and conspiracies would flourish in a city of darkness, it is to be considered that the conspirators themselves had no more candles than honest men; both parties were in the dark.

A gentleman presented a lace collar to the object of his adoration, and in a jocular way said: "Do not let any one else rumple it," said the lady, "I will take it off."

THE OLDEST AMERICAN NEWSPAPER.—The New Hampshire Gazette, published at Portsmouth, completed the one hundred and seventh year of its publication with its issue of Oct. 1st. The Gazette was started in 1756, and is the oldest newspaper in America.

A youth of 60 years has been arrested in Rhode Island for whipping his mother. He said the old lady's morals were bad.

The devil is said to be lame, and that, we suppose is the reason why the slowest people often catch the devil.

The breed of calves is supposed to have improved, but most persons would prefer Aaron's yellow calf to any heard of since his time.

"Why don't you give us a little Greek and Latin occasionally?" asked a country deacon of a new minister. "Why, do you understand those languages?" "No, but we pay for the best, and ought to have it."

A merchant who had died suddenly left in his desk a letter written to one of his correspondents. His clerk, a son of Erin, seeing it necessary to send the letter, wrote at the bottom, "Since writing the above I have died."

"Nat, what are you leaning over the empty cask for?"

"I am mourning over departed spirits."

Whoever is honorable and candid, honest and courteous, is a true gentleman, whether learned or unlearned, rich or poor.

Do one thing at a time—that's the rule. When you have done slandering your neighbors, begin to say your prayers.

Mr. and Mrs. Brewer, of Kentucky, are reported to be parents of twenty-two children. Rather an extensive Brewery, that.

Old anglers say, that, if you wish to catch a fine fish, you must not throw your bait directly at him. Young ladies may take notice.

An Irishman, who was troubled with the toothache, determined to have an old-fashioned extraction; but there being no dentist near he resolved to do the job himself; whereupon he filled the excavation with powder, and being afraid to touch it off, he put a slow match to it, lighted it, and then ran to get out of the way.

"Thou Wilt Come No More"

If the world has its joyful meetings, its happy gatherings, and its welcome of delight, it is also burdened with many painful partings—many sad farewell partings which Time cannot soothe, or aught we know on earth can ever partially assuage, as the cheeks grow pale with anguish, and the eye grows dim in tears.

Throb on thou weary, troubled heart, in all the consolation, all the response that rises above the surface of a cold and uncharitable world, that cherishes so little interest—harbor no feeling of regret; especially if thine has been and still remains a humble station in life that was clogged by poverty—there where they all could be seen at a glance in the little cottage by the wayside, or the rough log-cabin in some tangled wild-wood, that seemed so cheerless without and so gloomy within!

Never more!—'tis a very brief sentence—words which by themselves have no direct application; but link them with an attachment that has faded away with other bright dreams that buoyed you up in the "golden promise light of time," and you hold in your hand the withered stem that once so smilingly supported each rose tinted leaf; bid them speak to you without disguise, and you have a history you will try in vain to comprehend! You cannot evade its truth, or turn indifferently away, for experience in this relation does not always weave together a romance or a mere work of fiction however tragic its early conception appeared; but you are forced to confront a reality—a narrative that portrays the struggles and the trials of a broken heart! Reader! each day in your experience, the image of a friend, or the chosen few from the millions of earth who tread the same path, cherish the same sympathies, and live for the same objects, will return to gladden your waking hours. Have any little differences sprung up?—any misunderstandings existed? any misgivings dawned? If such has been the lesson you have learned; and you have parted with the companions of those bright summer days, fearing no responsive welcome would ever greet you again, then can you realize what it is to exclaim: "Thou wilt come no more!" Have you had, (but why ask the question for who has not?) your beau-ideal of earthly happiness that was embodied in a pair of loving eyes, the gentle beaming of a woman's smile?—And believing that the "course of true love never did run smooth" have you come to the end of your journey and found 'twas made in vain? that you were the dupe of your own fancy—a mere tool to while away the evening hours in a light and frivolous conversation, that had for its usual theme, the latest report and most ominous disclosures from Madam Rumors' prolific tongue? Will these thoughts be read by any who embarked upon the same journey and secured the prize; but who little dreamed that ere many months had glided by, indifference would usurp the sweet sway of a seemingly boundless devotion, on affection that withers when adversity comes;

"When they between whose severed souls, Once in close union tied, A gulf is set, a current rolls, Forever to divide."

Truly, as expressed by a gifted author:— "Alas! that there should come such hours to every trusting heart! hours when, in the torture of its grief, the soul beats its earth-bound wings against its life-letters like a wild mountain bird encoiled within prison bars—moments in which we feel ourselves aloft upon a wild sea of destiny, and all the world standing calmly by unheeding, while we sink beneath the cold waves!" Many things indeed will come back to us no more. We know not how long we may bask in the friendship that is dearest prized; or how soon the ties which bind us to this sublunary sphere may be rent asunder; or how suddenly we may be forced to utter the last Good Bye!

"Farewell it hath a sombre tone, The lip is slow to take it, It seemeth like the willow's moan, When autumn winds awake it, It seemeth like the distant sea, And yet thou say'st it unto me, And wait'st for my replying."

R. H. L.

A mammoth sea turtle was caught off the coast of Maine last week and brought into Portland. He measured seven feet from nose to tail, five feet laterally, two feet in thickness, and his flippers eight and a half feet from tip to tip, and weighed twelve hundred and eighty pounds. He was swimming in the open sea and was captured after a conflict of several hours.

GENTLEMAN—My good woman, how much is that goose?

Market Woman—Well, you may have two at seven shillings.

Gentleman—But I only want one.

Market Woman—Can't help it; aint a goin' to sell one without the other. Them ere geese, to my certain knowledge, hev been together for more'n fifteen years, and I aint a goin' to be so unfeelin' as to separate em now.

ANDREWS, the leader in the New York Riots, has never been punished. He is reported to be in Kansas as a Government spy. He was sent to New York to produce the riots there to give an excuse for declaring Martial Law. So we learn from the New York Express and Columbus Crisis.

The Crisis well asks: "Where are we. In what century do we live. What kind of 'Government' are we asked to support with blood, treasure and unmitigated abjection?"

One Jones, who had been sent to prison for marrying two wives, excused himself by saying that when he had one wife fought him, but when he had two they fought each other.
